

I believe that "Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act and Broadband Access and Services" is the wrong thing to do. Due to technical difficulties with implementation, and the diverse nature of communications that are carried out via the internet, this Act would cause excessive burdens on Internet Service Providers, Voice over IP providers, and the people who wish to use the services.

Additionally, due to freely available encryption software and the distributed nature of the Internet, the communications being tapped could not easily be understood, nor traced to proper sources.

Furthermore, this enactment of this Act would reduce freedom of the people of the United States of America, as well as place unwanted restrictions and burdens upon all people who use the Internet (many of whom are outside the US and not US citizens).
